1. Introduction

1.1 Acknowledgements
I would like to thank all those institutions and individuals who have provided data for this studbook, and Species360 for filling in the gaps.

1.2 Introduction and explanations
This is the twelfth edition of the international studbook for scimitar-horned oryx and aims to provide information on the global captive population. All individuals in the studbook that have been assigned permanent international studbook numbers should be added to institutional records.

This publication contains some demographic and genetic information to inform holders of scimitar-horned oryx about the general status of the global population. However, it is not designed to supersede any analyses or breeding recommendations produced by regional coordinators. The data include all global institutions who have provided information on their collection of scimitar-horned oryx regardless of regional zoo association affiliations and membership of coordinated breeding programmes. This full register and studbook for scimitar-horned oryx updates any previously published register.

1.3 The captive population
The data reported in this studbook are current through to 31 December 2016. As of that date, the historical population was 5022.4700.245 (9967) animals in 468 institutions, and the living population was 615.874.42 (1531) animals in 154 institutions. This number includes:

- 225.289.27 (541) animals in 29 institutions in the Asian region;
- 25.35.3 (63) animals in 5 institutions in the Australasian region;
- 13.20.4 (37) animals in 4 institutions in the Central & South American region;
- 155.264.7 (426) animals in 74 institutions in the European region;
- 147.211.0 (358) animals in 35 institutions in the North American region

In 2016, there were:

- 115.111.11 (237) births in 52 global institutions;
- 69.84.12 (165) deaths in 65 global institutions;
- 58.47.0 (105) transfers in 37 global institutions
1.4 Wild Status
The IUCN Red List of Threatened Species (Version 3.1) lists the scimitar-horned oryx as 'Extinct in the Wild' and there has been no evidence of its persistence in the wild for over 15 years. The species is listed in Appendix 1 of the Convention on Migratory Species (CMS), and in Appendix I on the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora (CITES) (IUCN SSC Antelope Specialist Group, 2016). Further information can be found at www.iucnredlist.org.

2. The natural history of scimitar-horned oryx

In this international studbook for scimitar-horned oryx, I summarise available information on the natural history and conservation of the species. For more detailed information see the ‘biology, husbandry and conservation of scimitar-horned oryx (Oryx dammah)’ published in 2004 and the papers and reports listed in the bibliography.

2.1 Taxonomy

Kingdom: Animalia
Phylum: Chordata
Class: Mammalia
Order: Artiodactyla
Suborder: Ruminantia
Family: Bovidae
Sub-family: Hippotragini
Genus: Oryx
Species: Dammah
Common name: Scimitar-horned oryx, scimitar oryx, Sahara oryx, oryx algazelle, antelope oryx, wach, begar al ouach (IUCN, 2004; Wakefield, 1995; Devillers & Devillers-Terschuren, 2003; Engel, 2004a)

The scimitar-horned oryx was given the scientific name of Oryx dammah after it was described by Cretzschmar in 1826. However, examination of the available literature reveals that it has been also known as Oryx algazelle, Oryx tao, Oryx damma, Oryx bezoarticus, Oryx ensicornis and Oryx leucoryx (which now belongs to the Arabian oryx) (Dolan, 1973).

There are four species in the genus oryx; scimitar-horned oryx (Oryx dammah), Arabian oryx (Oryx leucoryx), gemsbok (Oryx gazelle) and beisa oryx (Oryx beisa) which is further sub-divided into two sub-species; beisa oryx (Oryx beisa beisa) and the fringe-eared oryx (Oryx beisa callotis) (IUCN SSC Antelope Specialist Group, 2008). It is possible to cross breed all species of oryx with each other and with addax (Addax nasomaculatus) and the resulting hybrids are normally fertile (Engel, 2004a).

2.2 Morphology

Scimitar-horned oryx are large, predominantly white antelope whose neck, shoulders and rump are stained a deep russet colour. Their faces are white with light brown stripes running down their nose, cheeks and through the eyes. Their most notable features are the long, slender scimitar-shaped horns which can grow to a length of 150cm, although the norm is approximately 90 to 115cm for an adult oryx (Newby, 1978a, 1988; Barzdo, 1982; Kingdon, 1997). There is no sexual dimorphism between the sexes, although males may be slightly larger than females (Dolan, 1966; Engel, 2004). At birth, calves are a light brown colour, with adult colouration developing at three to 12 months old (Dolan, 1966; Gill & Cave-Browne, 1988; Nishiki, 1992).

2.3 Reproduction

Scimitar-horned oryx have a gestation period of between 242 to 300 days (approximately eight and a half months) and most of the time a single calf is born (Dolan, 1966; Dittrich, 1972; Anon, 1987; Newby, 1988). If a male is present during the female’s post-partum oestrus, it is possible for females to fall pregnant again.
immediately. Therefore, under favourable conditions females can have a calf every eight and a half to nine months (Nishiki, 1992; Wakefield & Engel, 2004). As such it may be necessary to separate the sexes at certain times of the year to control breeding. Calves are capable of following their mothers a few hours after birth (Dolan, 1966), but in the wild lay hidden in vegetation for the first two weeks of their life (IUCN, 1987; Gill & Cave-Browne, 1988). After two weeks they are crèched with calves of a similar age and are weaned at four to ten months (Newby, 1974; 1984; Mayor, 1984; Gill & Cave-Brown, 1988). In captivity, the calves will be crèched in a suitable location in the enclosure. Females reach sexual maturity between 11 and 35 months, and males between 10 and 30 months (Dittrich, 1970, 1972; Dolan, 1976; Gill & Cave-Browne, 1988; Puschmann, 1989; Nishiki, 1992; Volf, 1994; Engel, 2004b).

2.4 Social structure
Before their extinction in the wild, scimitar horned oryx typically formed herds of between 15 and 40 animals, but at certain times of the year, during their seasonal migrations or in areas of fresh pasture, aggregations of thousands could be seen (Dolan, 1966; Newby, 1978a, 1988; Barzdo, 1982, Devillers & Devillers-Terschuren, 2004). Some authors have suggested that herds were led by an adult bull (Dolan, 1966; Kranz & Ralls, 1979), but Newby (1974) reported that an adult female leads the group. Old males expelled from the herds tended to be solitary (Dolan, 1966), although it is possible that bachelor herds were formed (Engel, 2004c). Scimitar-horned oryx have a well-defined linear dominance hierarchy (Pfeifer, 1985; Engel, 2004d) which is evident in zoological institutions and at release sites in Tunisia (Wacher, 1986; Gordon, 1987; Molcanova, 2004). However, this may be disrupted if an individual is removed from the herd for some period of time and reintroduced at a later date (Engel, 2004d). The social organisation of captive scimitar-horned oryx is dictated either by the institutions in which they are held or the requirements of the regional coordinated captive breeding programme. European zoos hold all-female herds, bachelor herds, or harem groups with mixed sex calves. The majority of the herds are all-female or harem groups and this has resulted in a surplus male problem which needs addressing.

2.5 Ecology
Historically scimitar-horned oryx could be found on the arid grassy steppe that lies between the Sahel and the desert vegetation zones to the south of the Sahara (Newby, 1978a), and the Mediterraneo-Saharan transition zone to the north of the Sahara (Devillers & Devillers-Terschuren, 2003). These areas are characterised by scrub vegetation, scattered trees, rolling dunes and wooded inter-dunal depressions receiving an annual rainfall of 100 to 400mm (Dolan, 1966; Newby, 1978b, 1980, 1988; Anon, 1987). The rain falls in just one season, to the south of the Sahara this is from June to September (Anon, 1987; Newby, 1988) and to the north the rains begin in September at the earliest (E.Flach, pers comm.).

Shade is an important factor in modifying scimitar-horned oryx distribution, and at the hottest times of the day the oryx seek shade in wooded wadis and inter-dunal depressions to conserve water (Anon, 1987; Newby, 1988). This results in the oryx exhibiting a crepuscular activity pattern with their peak activity at dawn and dusk when they can be observed feeding (Anon, 1987; di Croce, pers. comm.). Scimitar-horned oryx are primarily grazers feeding on a wide variety of grasses and leguminous plants, but will occasionally take browse and other food resources such as the fallen seed pods of Acacia tortilis (Dolan, 1966; Anon, 1987). On fresh green pastures oryx need little drinking water as the vegetation meets their water requirements, but in the hot season scimitar-horned oryx seek out water rich plants such as the wild bitter melon Citrullus colocynthis, and will go to great lengths to obtain fresh water even though they are able to go without drinking for nine or ten months of the year (Dolan, 1966; Anon, 1987; Newby 1978a, 1988). The oryx evolved a migratory response to cope with the hot season or times of drought, and in former times these great migrations in search of food and rain numbered thousands of individuals (Dolan, 1966; Newby, 1978a, 1980, 1988; Barzdo, 1982).

Historically scimitar-horned oryx were subject to predation from a number of large carnivores including; cheetah Acinonyx jubatus, striped and spotted hyaena Hyaena hyaena and Crocuta crocuta respectively, wild dog Lycaon pictus and lion Panthera leo. Most predators have been exterminated from the Sahel thanks to systematic persecution (Newby, 1988) however there are reports that jackals pose a threat to oryx calves in Sidi Toui National Park, Tunisia (Molcanova, 2004).
3. Conservation of Scimitar-horned Oryx

3.1 Current and former status
The scimitar-horned oryx (SHO) is listed as ‘Extinct in the Wild’ in the IUCN Red List of Threatened Species (IUCN SSC Antelope Specialist Group, 2016). The SHO is Sahelian in its distribution with its former range extending both north and south of the Sahara from Mauritania eastwards to Sudan, Egypt westward to Western Sahara (Dolan, 1966; Anon, 1987; Dixon et al., 1991). In the north of their range, the SHO would have been geographically constrained by the Sahara and the Mediterranean sea, and in all probability were never as numerous as the SHO population south of the Sahara (Newby, 1978a, 1988). In the east of their range, the Nile made an effective barrier against dispersal, and to the west, the Sahara runs into the Atlantic. Only to the south of the Sahara would the SHO have been unencumbered by physical barriers, and it was there that they could be found in the largest number (Newby, 1988). SHO were formerly widespread throughout the Sahelian zone but successive waves of human occupation constrained their distribution, and their numbers dramatically declined until they were classified as ‘extinct in the wild’ (Newby, 1978a, 1988; Gordon, 1991; IUCN, 2002).

The trend towards extinction in the wild was faster in the Sahelian zone north of the Sahara than the southern Sahelian Zone, and the northern population of SHO were probably exterminated by 1900 (Newby, 1978a). Up until the 1920s and 1930s, SHO were abundant throughout the southern part of their range from the Atlantic to the Nile and were considered common in some areas (Anon, 1987; Newby 1978). By 1978, the largest remaining population could be found in the Ouadi Rimé-Ouadi Achim Game Reserve (OROA) in Chad. However, political unrest meant that conservation efforts in this area had to be abandoned until 1986. By mid 1987, it is almost certain that the number of SHO in the wild had plummeted to less than a 1000 with the only surviving population being found in OROA (Anon, 1987). The last SHO in Chad was reportedly killed in 1989 on the Ouadi Kharma in the OROA. It was a male and had previously been seen for a couple of years with two other animals. A survey in Chad in 2001 found no evidence of any remaining SHO in the wild (Moksia et al., 2001).

A number of factors have contributed to the decline and eventual extinction of SHO in the wild (Newby, 1988). These include; over-hunting, civil unrest, development, drought, and competition with domestic livestock (Dixon et al., 1991; Wakefield, 1992; Wakefield et al., 2004).

3.2 Conservation measures

SHO have been part of zoological collections since the 1890s, but most of the ex-situ population is descended from a capture of wild animals in Chad in the mid 1960s (Rost, 1985; Dixon et al., 1991). These SHO, and their offspring, were distributed to zoological institutions in Europe, North America, Japan and more recently Australasia (Dixon et al., 1991). The records of these transactions are incomplete and the ancestry of many animals is not fully known. In total, the number of wild-caught founders of the global population is estimated to be 40 – 50 (Dixon et al., 1991; Mace, 1986).

On an international level, Europe (EEP), North America (SSP), and Australasia (ASMP) have co-ordinated captive breeding programmes for SHO, although there are a large number of SHO outside of formal breeding programmes, particularly on ranches in the USA and in collections in the Arabian Peninsula. The Environment Agency-Abu Dhabi have a collection of more than 3000 SHO.

Tunisia

A number of projects have taken place in which SHO populations have been restored to fully fenced or partially fenced protected areas. The first was in Tunisia in 1985 and involved the transfer of 10 SHO from Marwell and Edinburgh zoos, UK, to Bou Hedma National Park (NP) (Gordon, 1991). The population was augmented by additional male SHO from Bratislava zoo in 1999.

The Tunisian SHO population was increased in 1999 when 10 (1.9) and 3 (1.2) SHO were sent from various EEP zoos to Sidi Toui NP and Oued Dekouk Nature Reserve (NR) respectively (Molcanova, 2003).

The most recent Tunisian SHO reintroduction project began in February 2007 when eight SHO (3.5) were translocated from Bou Hedma NP to Dghoumes NP, close to Tozeur in Tunisia. In December of the same year, nine (5.4) SHO from EEP and SSP institutions were transported to the Park to genetically augment the population. The population experienced high birth rates and low mortality rates, until southern Tunisia experienced a drought in 2012 and 2013. The fauna and flora in all the southern Tunisian protected areas were affected, and the SHO population suffered from low birth rates and increased mortality. Fortunately, the rains returned at the end of 2013 and the habitats and SHO were quick to recover (Figures 2 & 3).

The project in Dghoumes National Park is continuing with regular post-release monitoring, capacity building and training of eco-guards, development of an eco-museum, health monitoring of SHO populations and biodiversity surveying.

Other projects on wider Sahelo-Saharan biodiversity are ongoing across several parks and reserves and include the genetic analysis of the Tunisian SHO metapopulation, the reintroduction of the North African ostrich, rescue and rehabilitation of spur-thighed tortoises trafficked for the pet trade, dorcas gazelle conservation, and monitoring of the reintroduced addax populations in Djebil and Senghar National Parks.

The current Tunisian metapopulation of SHO consists of approximately 200 individuals divided across the protected areas. Please see Woodfine & Gilbert (2016) for a review of SHO conservation work in Tunisia.
Morocco

In 1995, five SHO were reintroduced to Souss Massa NP, Morocco, and these were followed by a further two releases in 1996 and 1997. In total, 29 SHO have been sent from EEP zoos to the Moroccan National Park (Müller & Engel, 2003) and by 2011 the population had grown to ~270 individuals (Oubrou pers. comm., 2013) (Figure 4).

Senegal

In February 1999, Israel donated eight SHO to the Guembeul Faunal Reserve, Senegal. These were joined by four more SHO from Paris Zoo, and in January 2003 eight SHO were translocated to The Ferlo Biosphere Reserve, Senegal (Gilbert, 2004b; B. Clark pers. comm.). There are now approximately 60-70 SHO in the Ferlo Biosphere Reserve and 110-120 SHO in the Guembeul Reserve (Abaigar pers.comm., 2013) (Figure 5).

Chad

The largest and most recent attempt to reintroduce the SHO to its historical range is currently underway in Chad. The programme is a joint initiative between the Environment Agency-Abu Dhabi (EAD), UAE and the Government of Chad in close collaboration with the Sahara Conservation Fund (SCF) as the implementing partner.
in Chad. A number of other global conservation organisations are contributing to the initiative.

The project aims to create a healthy and self-sustaining population of 500 breeding adult SHO in the unfenced Ouadi Rimé-Ouadi Achim Game Reserve (OROA) in Chad over the next five years. OROA was the last stronghold for SHO in the wild before their extinction and extends over 77,950 km² of Sahelian grassland and sub-Saharan habitats (Wacher et al., 2011).

The source population for this reintroduction is managed by the EAD and consists of more than 3,000 individuals. The EAD has built a genetically diverse world herd by importing unrelated individuals from Europe (EEP) and North America (SSP and private holders), integrating them into the existing herd in Abu Dhabi. The European and North American SHO will breed in the UAE and their offspring may be included in future releases to Chad.

On the 16th of March 2016, the first 25 SHO were transported from Abu Dhabi to the pre-release facility in OROA (Figure 6). The animals settled into the pre-release pens for a five-month acclimatisation period prior to their release into the wild. The SHO were fitted with GPS collars in July 2016, and shortly afterwards they were let out of their pens (Figure 7). They are now roaming freely within the reserve and appear to have settled into their natural habitat extremely well, finding key resources such as fresh grasses and shade (Figure 8), and have started calving with five calves being born to date in the wild (Figure 9). Second and third shipments of 25 SHO each have now arrived at the pre-release facility in OROA. Some of these (14) were released in January, 2017. The remainder will be released in August, 2017.

The released SHO are being closely monitored both through the GPS collars and rangers and wildlife biologists on the ground (Figure 10). The GPS collars provide data that track and help protect individuals, but also collect movement, behavioural, life-history and ecological data on the released SHO, which can aid further species reintroduction efforts. The collars will continue to collect data for 2-3 years before remotely detaching from the oryx.

The EAD and Zoological Society of London (ZSL) have also trained a team of wildlife experts and rangers in the reserve to monitor the SHO, as well as conduct community outreach programmes to ensure their continued protection. In addition to daily monitoring of SHO, the team in Chad are continuously engaging with nomadic herders who cross the protected area (Figure 11). The teams have been met with much excitement by older herders who recall the presence of SHO from their childhood.

Whilst this initiative is a collaboration between the Environment Agency-Abu Dhabi, the Government of Chad and the Sahara Conservation Fund, a number of other partner organizations are contributing to this reintroduction by carrying out wildlife and habitat surveys, pre-release population modeling and genetic studies to inform release strategy, sending animals to genetically augmentation of the source population in the UAE, post-release monitoring, animal husbandry in Chad, and training and capacity building.

This initiative is possibly the world’s most ambitious large mammal reintroduction programme and a huge step in the field of conservation.

4.1 Evaluating Conservation Breeding Success for an Extinct-in-the-Wild Antelope
Holly A. Little, Tania C. Gilbert, Marie L. Athorn, Andrew R. Marshall

Abstract
With the number of threatened species increasing globally, conservation breeding is vitally important now more than ever. However, no previous peer-reviewed study has attempted to determine how the varying conditions across zoos have influenced breeding by an extinct-in-the-wild species. We therefore use questionnaires and studbook data to evaluate the influence of husbandry practices and enclosure design on scimitar-horned oryx (Oryx dammah) breeding success, at the herd level. Regression models were used to identify the variables that best predicted breeding success among 29 zoos across a five-year period. Calf survival decreased with herd age and the use of soft substrates in hardstand areas (yard area usually adjacent to the indoor housing), explaining 30.7% of overall variation. Calf survival also decreased where herds were small and where food provisions were not raised (and hence likely incited competition), although these were less influential. Likewise, birth rate decreased with soft substrates in hardstand areas and unraised food provisions, although these were less influential than for calf survival. Birth rate increased with year-round male presence, yet this decreased calf survival. Compared to previous studies, the number of enclosure/husbandry influences on breeding were relatively few. Nevertheless, these few enclosure/husbandry influences explained over one third of the variation in calf survival. Our data therefore suggest some potential improvements and hence that extinct-in-the-wild species stand a greater chance of survival with empirical design of zoo enclosures and husbandry methods.

4.2 Fecal parasite identification by microscopy and PCR in scimitar-horned oryx, Oryx dammah, managed at two sites
Cassandra D. Pauling, Anna R. Oller & Victoria Jackson

Abstract
The scimitar-horned oryx, Oryx dammah, an endangered species extinct in the wild, is managed in various captive management programs and is the focus of reintroduction efforts. Management variability can contribute to substantial parasite load differences, which can affect deworming programs and potentially transfer parasites to different regions with translocations. Parasite studies in O. dammah are lacking. In this study, we determined fecal egg/oocyst counts of O. dammah in two captive herds, Fossil Rim Wildlife Center (FRWC) and Kansas City Zoo (KCZ). Fecal egg counts (FEC) were performed on O. dammah feces collected seasonally using the modified McMaster method, and microscopy provided additional identification of parasite genera ova and oocysts. To identify parasites to species level, homogenized
Fecals provided DNA subjected to the polymerase chain reaction (PCR) using genus specific primers. Microscopy and sequencing results indicated the presence of Strongylus (Strongylus vulgaris, Angiostrongylus cantonensis), Trichostrongylus (Haemonchus contortus, Camelostongylus mentulatus), Trichuris (T. leporis, T. ovis, and T. discolor), Isospora (Isospora Gryphoni) and Eimeria (E. zuernii and E. bovis), with Strongylus being the most common. Nematodirus was identified through microscopy at FRWC. Fecal egg counts were significantly higher in (FRWC) than in (KCZ) in all samplings (P < 0.001). No significant difference was seen between parasite load and seasons (P = 0.103), nor site and season (P = 0.51). Both study sites maintained most animals within commonly accepted FEC levels found in domestic livestock. Individuals with high numbers of EPG or OPG were subordinate males, pregnant females, or neonates. Several significant interactions were found between genera of parasites, age, sex, season, and pregnancy status in the FRWC herd. Sampling limitations prevented further analysis of the KCZ herd. Understanding interactions between parasite loads and physiological, environmental, and regional differences can help determine inter-specific transfer of parasites, and establish appropriate anthelmintic programs for O. dammah herds.

4.3 Vegetative habitat selection of Scimitar horned oryx (Oryx dammah) in Bouhedma National Park, Southern Tunisia

Houssem chedli Traouit Beyouli & Mohamed Neffati

Abstract

The present study aims to analyze the habitat selection of the Scimitar horned oryx, reintroduced in Bouhedma National Park (south Tunisia) and to identify the phytoecological factors affecting their occurrence during winter 2011 and spring 2012. Multivariate analyses of variance (MANOVA) performed by SAS package revealed that the vegetation is not the main factor in the selection of habitat by oryx in the park. It avoids glaze and mountain areas despite the presence of palatable species.

Keywords: Scimitar horned oryx; Habitat selection; Vegetation cover; Bouhedma National Park

6. Global Management of Scimitar-horned Oryx

Scimitar-horned oryx are managed in three coordinated captive breeding programmes in the North American region, European region, and Australasian region. Management in the Japanese region is carried out by the regional studbook holder. In Europe and North America the management of the breeding programmes are assisted by the TAGs and elected advisors. Below are the contact details for the regional coordinators, studbook keepers and TAG chairs involved in the management of scimitar-horned oryx:
